

THE SUSSEX PLAN

Secret War in Occupied France

1943-1945

THE SUSSEX PLAN WAS A SECRET trilateral French, British and American secret mission. It was planned by General Eisenhower's Staff as an intelligence-gathering effort in support of the Allied landings in Normandy. Under the command of the British MI6, American OSS and French BCRA, 120 men and women were chosen to carry out this daring plan which relied on undercover, plain-clothed two-man teams made up of a radio operator and an observer. Parachuted behind enemy lines from February 1944 until the complete liberation of the French territory, these teams' main task was to send a constant flow of intelligence reports on the German order of battle.

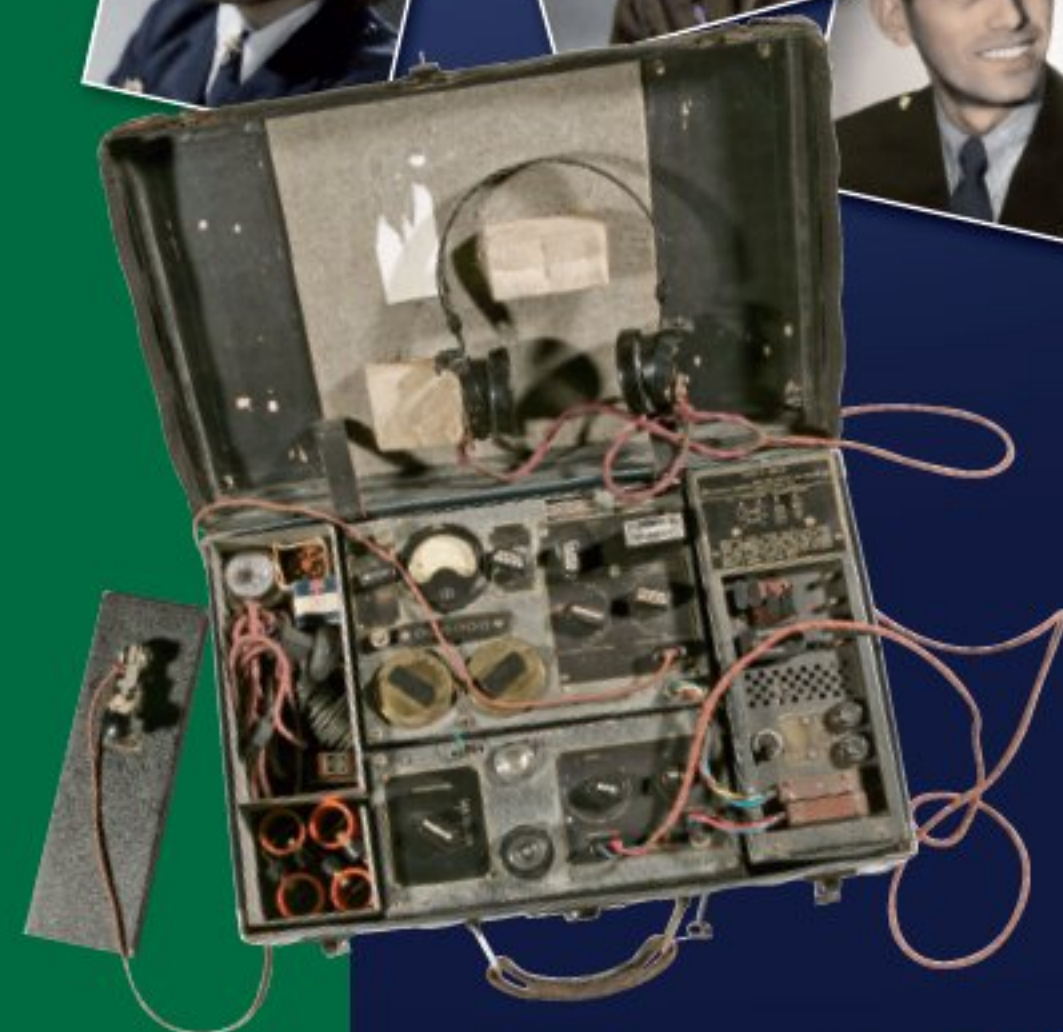

In addition to the Sussex Plan, the Proust Plan, which is presented in this book for the very first time, was a combined Franco-American intelligence gathering operation.

From D-day, the Proust Plan was active in the American Area of Operations, deploying a total of 65 field agents to carry out both intelligence and direct action missions.

The author :

Dominique Soulier is the son of a BCRA (Free French secret services) radio operator who operated as part of the Sussex Plan. For the past 30 years, he has developed a very keen interest for the little known Sussex Plan. Over the years, he has managed to gather a large amount of equipment and unpublished documents on those special operations.
